

Harvard University Graduate School of Design

Pollman Fellowship in Real Estate and Urban Development

Now Accepting Applications for the 2022-2023 Fellowship Year

Established in 2002 through the generous gift of Harold A. Pollman, the Pollman Fellowship in Real Estate and Urban Development is given to outstanding postdoctoral graduates in real estate, urban planning, and development to spend one year as a visiting scholar at the Harvard University Graduate School of Design. Applicants in the fields of economic development, political economy, urban economics, and other areas in urban planning related to real estate and urban development are also encouraged to apply.

Postdoctoral candidates for the Pollman Fellowship should either have received their doctorate or have submitted their dissertation for final awarding of the degree. The fellowship award is $30,000, plus medical benefits, and is to be used towards living and research expenses. While at Harvard, the fellow may audit courses and may seek to supplement the fellowship with teaching and research assignments. The fellow is expected to produce at least one publishable paper in a refereed journal, to participate in research workshops, and to contribute to the life of the School.

The deadline for applications is February 28, 2022.

Interested applicants should send a short statement of their current and proposed research, as well as a copy of their resume, by email to:

Ryan Jacob
Department Manager
Department of Urban Planning and Design
Harvard University Graduate School of Design urbanplanninganddesign@gsd.harvard.edu